

MSN Education Practicum

The nursing education practicum offers an opportunity for MSN students to apply the skills and knowledge they acquire throughout their masters degree. The graduate practicum offers students enrolled in a MSN program the opportunity to fulfill school requirements and obtain hands-on experience in both an academic, simulation and healthcare setting while giving back to the next generation of RN students.

Practicum

Participating in a graduate practicum at Schreiner University will give you an opportunity to apply concepts, methods, and principles learned in the classroom within a formal educational setting.

Practicum hours focus on your new role as an instructor or educator. Responsibilities may include instructing at a clinical site, running simulation, class lecture, grading, formative/summative feedback sessions, student engagement/retention, facilitate meetings, lesson plan preparation and transforming the lives of students.

Preceptor

You may select from one of several seasoned nursing MSN, Ph.D. or DNP prepared faculty. Receive real-time feedback and develop effective strategies for student teaching. Our mission is committed to producing quality graduates who function as members and leaders of the interdisciplinary health care team in the Hill Country and universally who are prepared for meaningful work and purposeful lives in a changing global society. As nurse leaders and life-long learners, graduates are dedicated to providing ethical leadership in clinical practice, education and scholarship.
